of the European Union

Participatory Photography for Social Practice is a Youth Exchange, which will involve Programme countries with main aim to empower participants to take actions and develop initiatives by and with Roma marginalized young people tackling the issues of social exclusion and marginalization in their local communities by using participatory photography as a tool for social practices.

This project gathered young people from Romania, Bulgaria, Germany, Greece, Italy, Serbia and The Republic of North Macedonia to discuss about important social issues that affect Roma culture through workshops and photography.

In the first days, we visited the Roma settlement in the city of Novi Sad, Veliki Rit.

Lots of Roma people are working in the recycling organisation as its very close to the settlement.

As we entered the settlement, we were the centre of attention, as it could be strange for someone to see a group of people approach their neighbourhood. Although they did not know us, they embraced us and showed us around, especially the kids.

"I'm ready to ride life"

It was great for everybody , as the mood was great, we started conversations about many different topics and we had fun doing a lot of activities.

"Show me what you got"

But what matters the most, is happiness. The way we could recognise happiness was through the kids' faces who could not stop smiling.

"Wanna play with us?"

"Grab me because I don't want to fall"

"Pure Happiness"

Also one of the topics discussed in the project, was expressing different situations through the camera lense. In every topic, the participants tried used their photography knowledge in order to express different feelings.
